

Still no justice for Kevin Hughes

KEVIN HUGHES: A political prisoner.

ON FRIDAY 6th October at the Royal Courts of Justice in The Strand, Central London, Justice Holland heard the appeal of political prisoner Kevin Hughes.

The proceedings in Court No.5 took just 10 minutes, while Kevin was locked in a dock with bars sitting beside a prison officer. The judge reduced the racially motivated part of the sentence by 6 months (from 18 months to 12 months), indicating that the sentence from the original trial at Worcester Crown Court had been severe. But the alleged assault part of his sentence (12 months) stayed the same. Kevin had been sentenced to two-and-a-half years in prison for "racially aggravated common assault" after a complaint by an illegal immigrant to the police.

Incredibly during the original trial, no doctor's notes were ever produced to substantiate the alleged assault that the twice failed Kurdish asylum-seeker had told police had taken place. In fact no doctor had ever examined the man at the time of the incident or at any time after. This was brought up at the appeal by Kevin's barrister but didn't seem to sway the appeal judge.

So Kevin Hughes will now stay in prison until May 2007. Such is the parlous state of British "justice", that a man will spend Christmas incarcerated away from his family and friends, based on the word of a man who twice tried to con his way into our country and claimed he had been verbally abused, but then later admitted he could not speak English.

Outside court over 30 people, including BNP chairman Nick Griffin and deputy leader Simon Darby, gathered to show their support.

SUPPORT: Clear message for the Appeal Court.

Another MP confirms: It's just Labour and the BNP!

The British National Party is now the main challenger to Labour in many industrial working class seats.

That's according to the Labour MP for Rotherham Denis MacShane. Writing in the Daily Telegraph on Friday 3rd November he said:

"Labour's problem is not with government, but with party politics. In constituency after constituency, membership is dropping. The BNP is now the second party in many industrial working-class seats. Last month, in my own constituency of Rotherham, the BNP was defeated in a key municipal by-election, but only after a tough door-to-door campaign. Of the 2,300 votes cast, the Tory candidate got just 146."

MACSHANE: "BNP is now second."

This revelation from an MP for a constituency situated in part of Labour's heartland that was once so secure it was called 'The Peoples' Republic of South Yorkshire', is in accord with similar pronouncements from other Labour MPs and Labour Party officials. They are all saying that in many local council seats at the elections in May, it will be Labour and the BNP that are the only serious contenders.

DUDLEY: This is what the Tory-run council has planned for the town.

Black Country British National Party members and supporters rallied to the flag last month to demonstrate against the intended Islamic village on a site by the side of Dudley by-pass.

Plans for the 'village' which includes a £15 million Islamic centre and a host of new buildings around a 200 ft high minaret adorning a huge mosque, were condemned by former Dudley BNP councillor Simon Darby.

"This is a cultural Trojan horse to bring Islam into the centre of Dudley."

"The Islamic faith, with its record on women's rights, is just not compatible with Black Country culture. Labour and Conservative politicians should hang their heads in shame for even contemplating such a project."

"Islam is not a 'take it or leave it' religion. It is a political creed and way of life for its followers. To hand over part of the centre of our town for a 'Muslim Village' is tantamount to trampling all over Dudley's Christian heritage and surrendering any chance of a non-Islamic future for the town."

At the demonstration was Sandwell

British National Party councillor Simon Smith, who told Freedom:

"It was an excellent turnout from across the generations. Senior citizens, parents, teenagers and children."

"Local people want to tell the council that they are happy with the town's skyline dominated by Dudley Castle. They don't want some non-Christian, Middle-Eastern structure casting its shadow over Dudley."

"The support from passing motorists was incredible. It was quite clear that we were representing the views of the thousands of people who drove past and gave us the thumbs-up. We just need them to show this sort of support at the local council elections in May."

Covering the event, which went ahead with the co-operation of the police, was the locally-based newspaper, the Wolverhampton Express & Star which was given an exclusive tip-off of what was taking place.

The race-hate murder the media don't want to know

The murder of Kriss Donald has been described as a race-hate crime of appalling inhumanity against a defenceless boy.

The 15-year-old was repeatedly stabbed in the chest and back before being doused in petrol and set alight while he bled to death by a gang of Glasgow Muslims who fled Britain for Pakistan after the murder.

But despite running for 5 weeks, the Kriss Donald race-hate murder trial at the High Court in Edinburgh has been virtually ignored by the media.

It was the most vicious and sadistic case of race-murder in post-war Britain, but not a single British national newspaper covered the trial - with the exception of one brief report in The Times.

Compare this with the blanket television news coverage and huge headlines that the murder of black teenager Anthony Walker, by a gang of white thugs in a park in Huyton, Merseyside received last year.

Why the disparity? Simply because the murder of a black youngster by white racists conforms to the politically correct notion of a race-hate crime. The murder of a white boy by Muslim thugs does not.

BNP oppose Haslar closure

THE British National Party is campaigning to stop Britain's last remaining military hospital at Haslar, Portsmouth from being sold off to developers.

Over the past ten years, seven military hospitals in Britain, Germany and Cyprus have been closed, leaving our injured servicemen being treated in the public wards of our NHS hospitals.

There is an understandable reluctance among serving troops about being treated in a NHS hospital that they believe is unsuitable for military patients. The attack on an injured soldier by a Muslim visitor to Selly Oak hospital in Birmingham has confirmed these fears. Soldiers on operations say they would rather receive treatment at the American military hospital in Ramstein, Germany, an NHS hospital in Britain.

ROYAL HASLAR: Looking after our injured servicemen since 1753.

"It is madness to close down the Royal Haslar military hospital when our soldiers are fighting on two fronts in Afghanistan and Iraq," said a BNP spokesman.

"If NHS hospitals have to be used then wards should be set aside for this specific purpose. It is beyond belief that injured soldiers are left on public wards where they can be abused by anyone wandering in off the street."

Gypsy sites get £57m to prepare for 2008 influx

THE Government is preparing for the influx of gypsies and travellers from Eastern Europe by allocating £57 million over the next 18 months to address the current shortfall in provision and tackle the problem of unauthorised camping. With Bulgaria and Romania joining the European Union in 2008 and both countries having large and very mobile gypsy population, there are predictions that many will target Britain in an effort to access our benefits system.

To meet this demand the Government is immediately making available £17 million of taxpayers' money to provide 134 additional pitches for gypsies and travellers, and to refurbish 57 existing sites.

Africans for Norwich

IMMIGRANTS from the Congo are to be offered homes in Norfolk.

A group of about 60 Africans are to settle in the Norwich area as part of the Home Office-funded Gateway Protection Programme.

The Government will provide £575,000 to fund the resettlement over the next year, which will pay for all accommodation.

Similar schemes are under way in Sheffield and Bolton, and Norfolk is set to become one of the first southern counties to take part.

Pupil safety fears at Labour's new super school in Burnley

LEN STARR: Children shouldn't be afraid to go to school.

POLICE have been called out 19 TIMES to Burnley's new super school, Hameldon Community College, in its first five weeks open.

So it was no wonder that worried parents attended a public meeting, amid reports of children being stabbed, assaulted, threatened with knives and bullied, hoping to discuss the deteriorating situation with headteacher Gill Broome, and education officials from Lancashire County Council.

But they didn't bother to turn up, so it was left to British National Party councillor Len Starr, to pledge that he would make sure the school was aware of parents' concerns and that he would push for increased security measures so that pupils weren't attending school in fear for their lives.

Len told the meeting:

"It is disappointing that nobody is here from the county council or the school. It can't fill those here tonight with confidence. These people should be at meetings like this because they have a responsibility to parents."

Hameldon Community College was formed from merging Ivy Bank and Habergham schools as part of Labour's £250 million 'community integration' school building programme, launched in response to the Burnley riots of 2001.

"Islam's beauty, wisdom and integrity" More drivels as Labour goes in search of Muslim votes

THIS is Foreign Secretary Margaret Beckett's latest attempt to win back the block vote of Britain's Muslim Community in time for next May's local elections. When she talks about "Islam's beauty, wisdom and integrity," it makes one wonder what planet she has been living on.

"I want to send to Muslims my personal wishes for the happy occasion of the start of the holy month of Ramadan.

"I know that Ramadan is a month of contemplation, prayer, and of the Koran. I realise too that it is the month of compassion, charity and sacrifice. This serves as an important reminder for us all, Muslim and non-Muslim, of our duty to help those less fortunate than ourselves.

"Islam is very much a part of our history and our multi-cultural society in Britain. The Government is committed to working with the Muslim community to ensure that ignorance about this great faith is tackled.

"We are also working across the world to support opportunities for dialogue between faiths and cultures, and for mutual exchange of ideas.

BECKETT: "Islam is a great faith."

For only by talking to each other and understanding each other's cultures and traditions can Islam's beauty, wisdom and integrity be appreciated. This is a duty for us all. Finally, on behalf of all my colleagues in Government, I would like to wish you Ramadan Mubarak."

We can't do without them

"British Muslims are central to our political, business and social life."

Anti-Christmas political correctness hits charities

THERE'S no mention of Christmas at all on Bradford City Council's special 'seasonal' greetings cards produced to help raise money for charity.

When British National Party Bradford City councillor Paul Cromie, called the Lord Mayor's Appeal Office to order 200 Christmas cards he was told that they were not actually Christmas cards. Apparently, as Bradford's Mayor Choudhary Rangzeb is a Muslim, there are only specific cards for the Muslim festival of Eid Mubarak. For non-Muslims there are just plain greetings cards. This is in case the mention of Christmas causes offence to non-Christians.

"Apparently the greetings card is plain so that it is suitable for those who want to celebrate Winter Solstice and Hanukkah as well Christmas," Paul told Freedom. "So in the eyes of this council, the Christians of our city have been relegated in status to that of a couple of dozen pagans and Druids.

"I think this is a scandal. Not just because the majority population is being ignored in this manner, but because the Lord Mayor's Appeal itself will suffer because of this deliberate exclusion.

"Producing a Christmas card as well, would have really boosted sales, so the Mayor's charities are missing out due to another example of political correctness gone mad."

Queensbury gets its Christmas tree

THERE hasn't been a Christmas tree outside the Victoria Hall in Queensbury since 1995 and last month Bradford Council turned down a residents' petition for one, citing 'lack of funds'.

But local BNP councillor Paul Cromie, wasn't prepared to leave it there. He bought a 30ft tree from the council's civic florist and got permission to get it erected. He then put the funds in place for Christmas lights and the council's maintenance department to ensure the tree was safe, secure and seen in all its glory by November 30th. The money came from Paul's councillor's allowance.

Now that is action for you!

£25,000 for City's Eid lights

THERE'S no funding available for Christmas trees for Queensbury, but Bradford Mayor Choudhary Rangzeb, has managed to lay his hands on £25,000 for new illuminations to go up around the city to celebrate Eid.

The council claims the decorations, which have been made by Bradford's festival lights team, feature 'traditional designs'. However a council spokesman said that 'traditional' in this case, didn't include anything Christian or patriotic.

DRAIN: Foreign prisoners cost the taxpayer £420 million a year.

BNP will deport foreign prisoners without a penny!

FOREIGN prisoners are costing the taxpayer £420 million each and every year and pushing Britain's jails to bursting point.

The prison population reached a record 79,843 last month with 12,000 inmates from overseas . . . and it is all going to get much worse.

From the limited figures available to the public, Freedom discovered that the number of foreigners arrested in Britain had risen by nearly 20% in the last year, with one in ten of people held by the police from outside the UK.

But these official figures are just the tip of the iceberg and the real situation is much worse. Statistics from the Metropolitan Police and Birmingham forces, where there is the largest concentration of foreign nationals, were not available.

The British National Party would deport all foreign prisoners to their country of origin and those arrested and convicted would serve their sentences back there.

Labour's plan to pay for foreign prisoners £2,500 to leave the UK when they have served their sentence is nonsense

The £20 million scheme is a waste of taxpayers' money. British inmates receive just £47 to last them a fortnight when they are released from prison but this Government wants to bribe foreign prisoners with 50 times that amount just to leave the country.

And then there's no guarantee they won't return. Our border controls are non-existent, so these criminals could rip off the taxpayer for £2,500, leave Britain and then come straight back.

The biggest and best Trafalgar Club dinner

OVER 125 guests attended the 2006 Trafalgar Club (TC) evening which was set in a fashionable and famous hotel in the tranquil and picturesque heartland of one of the most important conservation areas in West Yorkshire.

After dinner, host Nick Cass, welcomed the guests and introduced the first of the evening's speakers, Ian Kitchen, who detailed the hotel's history, facilities, its owners and its grounds. Situated in one of the areas most beautiful settings, the venue has over 100 species of birds nesting within the grounds, and a lake filled with various fish.

Next to speak was local BNP councillor Colin Auty, who thanked all the members for their generous support, and outlined the valuable help they had given over the last number of years. After giving a brief example of his work in the Kirklees council chamber, Colin explained how Trafalgar Club members' generosity had helped seal the breakthrough in places like Barking and Dagenham.

The next guest speaker of the evening was Alan Smith, a director of Great White Records (GWR). He talked about the ability of music to touch peoples' emotions like no other form of communication, and gave heartfelt thanks to the TC members for their help in the set-up costs for GWR equipment. He promised a more professional approach in the promotion of any future range of products.

AFTER DINNER: Bradford BNP councillor Paul Cromie, outlines the work he is doing in his Queensbury ward.

The final speaker before the raffle was drawn was Bradford BNP councillor Paul Cromie, who outlined the work he is doing in his Queensbury ward. Nick Cass thanked long time TC organiser Jean Griffin for her dedicated service to the Club and also thanked his wife Suzy for her unstinting support and presented her with a beautiful bouquet of flowers. The five raffle prizes included a pewter tankard made in Sheffield, locally produced chocolates, a Trafalgar Club memorial plate, Nelson's favourite drink - a bottle of 57% rum and a superb painting of Nelson himself from a local talented BNP artist.

Guests of honour were the British National Party chairman Nick Griffin and his wife Jackie. Nick spoke about our country's heroes, the political battles we face and what the BNP must do to take advantage of future situations. He thanked the TC members for their continued dedication and the invaluable financial help they have given the Party. With the speeches finished, Nick Cass introduced the live music.

Singing songs about Nelson and British heroes, the BNP councillor guitar duo of Colin Auty and Paul Cromie, drew large rounds of applause, especially when they finished with a song dedicated to political prisoner Kevin Hughes.

The next morning 40 members took a tour around the Yorkshire Mining Museum. Twenty at a time, they crammed into the cage and descended 150 metres below ground to begin this unforgettable experience. For the next hour and half the TC members relived part of a typical day for the hundreds of thousands of brave British miners who provided the country's fuel needs of the last century.

It was a reflective group which met up in the cafe for a final lunch before pledging to see each other again next year.

BNP poll 29% in Charnwood to record best ever result in Leicestershire

CHARNWOOD COUNCIL
Shelthorpe By-Election
Thursday 5th October 2006

Neville Stork (Lab)	643
Andrew Holders (BNP)	478
James Poland (Con)	386
Paul Tyler (Lib-Dem)	155
BNP Percentage: 28.8%

by Wayne McDermott
ON Thursday 5th October the newly formed Loughborough BNP group contested its very first by-election. The target from the start in a ward never contested before was to beat one of the three main parties. This is something the BNP in Leicestershire has never done before. On the night, not only was that goal achieved, it was done so by recording the highest ever BNP vote in the county, pushing Labour all the way.

ANDY HOLDERS: Fine candidate.
The Tories were confident of winning the seat especially when they found so many Labour supporters switching to the BNP. In a desperate effort to shore up its vote, Labour pulled in local MP Andy Reed, and Council leader Max Hunt, to canvas daily within the ward. Andy Holders and his small band of campaigners worked the ward day in day out. The weather didn't matter, they worked through the rain and wind and enjoyed the odd sunny day. The other parties for once played to our tune, whatever we did they responded, which in itself was a huge boost and we started to believe we could get a decent vote. In the end it took FOUR smear leaflets including one from Ross Kemp (Grant Mitchell in EastEnders) to stop us winning. But even this couldn't prevent many people turning out to vote for the very first time to make this once safe Labour seat become a marginal, where a 5% swing from Labour to the BNP would give the Party its first councillor in Leicestershire. The BNP campaign started with the cleaning of a local children's park, the sort of activity that will not stop just because the election is over. Plans have been made for future activities in the area so could anyone wishing to help please contact us a tPO Box 8186, Loughborough LE11 9AX. This result has given the British National Party a huge boost in Leicestershire. Now the Party is in the Premier League of local politics and counting down the days till May 3rd.

Rotherham West By-Election

A DISGRACEFUL election scam perpetrated on the voters of Rotherham West by Labour and the Liberal Democrats denied the BNP its first seat on the council. Back in May, Lib-Dem candidate Lee Ridsdale had polled 634 votes in the seat won by Labour with 1205 votes. But this time around with Marlene Guest standing for the BNP, the Lib-Dems dramatically pulled their candidate in order to give Labour a clear run. "It was a deceitful manoeuvre that will backfire on both parties on May 3rd," a BNP spokesman told Freedom. "Even with Lib-Dem support, Labour's vote was down. Next time there's unlikely to be an Independent standing and Rotherham West will become a BNP seat with a sizeable majority irrespective of whether there's a Lab/Lib-Dem deal or not."

British National Party WHERE WE STAND

CRIME: A crack-down on crime with more 'Bobbies on the Beat'. Tougher treatment of criminals, including the return of the death penalty for child killers and terrorists. Zero tolerance for drug-dealers and violent thugs.

IMMIGRATION: An end to immigration and the scandal of bogus asylum seekers flooding Britain. Use the billions now wasted in foreign aid to fund generous 'Homeward Bound' schemes to encourage immigrants to return to their land of ethnic origin.

INDUSTRY: British ownership and control of British industry and resources, including the mass media. Protection of British jobs and industry by selective exclusion of foreign manufactured goods from the British market.

HEALTH: We will use the vast sums of money now wasted on funding our membership of the EU for the restoration of an effective national health service and proactive measures to produce a healthier population in the first place.

EUROPEAN UNION: British withdrawal from the European Union. We will trade with Europe where it benefits Britain, but want no political ties or monetary union.

EDUCATION: A return to traditional methods of education, with stronger discipline in the classroom and an end to 'trendy' teaching methods which have failed our children so badly.

ENVIRONMENT: A healthy environment for a healthy people - the protection of our countryside; a ban on greenfield-site house building except in exceptional cases of genuine local need and an end to field trials of genetically modified crops.

FARMING & FISHING: The regeneration of British farming, with the objective of achieving the maximum self-sufficiency in food. The restoration of the fishing industry through protection of our traditional fishing grounds.

GOVERNMENT & COMMUNITY: The establishment of a government that puts British interests first. A return to healthy moral values and policies aimed at strengthening the family and community. Tough penalties for corruption in public life.

FREEDOM: A massive expansion of freedom and democracy to roll back the erosion of our traditional freedoms and truly reflect the wishes of the people. The adoption of popular referenda and high technology direct democracy.

DEFENCE: An alternative defence strategy based on the principle of armed neutrality. No British blood should be shed in conflicts which do not involve British interests. The restoration of the County Regiment system and the reversal of defence cuts which have weakened our Armed Forces and cost thousands of jobs.

REMEMBER! It doesn't matter if you don't agree with us on every last thing. Like all other democratic political parties, the BNP includes some members who disagree with one or two policies. Just ask yourself whether you agree with more of our policies than those of the other parties. Most people do, which is why we are the fastest growing political party in Britain today.

Please help us all you can

The British National Party made further progress along the road to gaining more political influence within our country with a very good set of local election results on May 4th 2006. Now it is vital that we build on these gains, so the campaign for the May 3rd 2007 round of local elections must start now. Funds are desperately needed to help finance this 'push for power' - please help all you can.

Promoting guilt to silence opposition to immigration

THE slave trade and its abolition 200 years ago is to become a compulsory subject in schools.

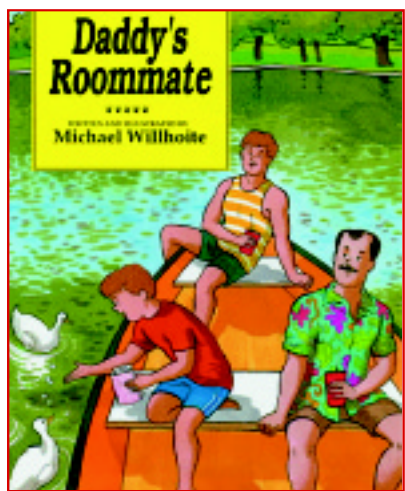

It's all part of a propaganda programme for the promotion of diversity issues within the National Curriculum ordered by Alan Johnson, the Education Secretary.

The new lesson is being championed by David Lammy, the Culture Minister, who said not enough people knew of Britain's role in slavery. "This is an important issue and is being considered by the diversity review," he said.

SLAVERY: Children will be taught how wicked our ancestors were.

So who is going to fund this brainwashing exercise? Why none other than the British taxpayers courtesy of a £1 million grant. A BNP spokesman said the move was nothing to do with education but all about instilling guilt in the impressionable minds of young children. "A population being forced to still carry the burden of guilt from events two centuries ago is unlikely to have the courage to speak out on subjects such as immigration and positive discrimination."

CLOSE THE CLOSET: Books which attempt to make homosexuality acceptable have no place in school.

Gay books to be compulsory reading in school

BRITISH schoolchildren could soon see traditional favourite fairy tales handed down through the generations, replaced by new stories promoting homosexuality.

Next month MPs will vote on the Sexual Orientation Regulations which would ban any criticism of homosexuality being voiced in schools. Children will have to read books such as Daddy's Roommate which is aimed at children as young as four, Heather has Two Mummies and The Sissy Duckling - a reworking of the Hans Christian Andersen story 'The Ugly Duckling'. The idea of such books promoting homosexuality becoming compulsory reading in schools has already been questioned by teachers in the UK. "It's not the sort of thing children as young as four years old should be learning about," was one verdict.

First they take our jobs now they are taking our money

BANKS and other financial institutions moving their call centres to India and Pakistan doesn't just put the thousands of Britons who worked in them on the dole.

It also, it has now been discovered, puts the millions of Britons who use these banks and the like at risk of being systematically stolen from and defrauded.

This is because those working for a pittance on the other end of the phone in Bangalore or Islamabad are not only, in many cases, unable to speak understandable English, they are also often dishonest and willing to sell on your bank details to criminal gangs.

Undercover reporters for ITN and Channel 4 have discovered a roaring international trade in your bank and financial details, sold by crooked Indian call centre staff to local agents of international criminal gangs. These people then use your information to steal your money. This is the identity fraud that you are at risk from when supposedly personal and confidential information is sold to others. Confronted with these shocking revelations about the dishonesty of their many Indian call centre staff, one of the largest banks on Britain's High Streets, HSBC, has responded by publicly denying that British customer details had been sold to criminals by its Indian call centre staff. But at the same time it has launched an investigation of 300,000 of its British bank current accounts to discover the extent of the thefts which may have been caused by "offshoring" the bank's call centres to India.

No doubt HSBC will be just as coy about what it discovers in the way of crooked call centres in India as it is about what 'HSBC' stands for! The owner of what was once Britain's Midland Bank is actually the Hong Kong and Shanghai Banking Corporation, controlled by the Chinese!

Britons who don't want Chinese communists or Indian crooks 'looking after' their money would do well to find one of the few remaining banks not foreign-owned or offshored and move their accounts there!

JON CRUDDAS: The Labour Party are living in a parallel world to Britain's working class.

by Steve Johnson

DAGENHAM MP and Labour deputy leadership candidate Jon Cruddas, has admitted that the British National Party raises valid issues on immigration and housing which reflect real local concerns and should be debated seriously. He even conceded that the BNP was right to attack globalisation and immigration for driving down the wages of ordinary working Britons. Addressing a Labour Party meeting in Manchester, the Dagenham MP acknowledged the extent that Labour has failed its traditional supporters: "When I go round and talk to my constituents, I cannot look them in the face and say another year of outstanding, relentless achievements. Their housing pressures are growing. The borough has the worst-structured health inequalities in the country and we have been hit by a £13million cut in our own primary care trust budget." Cruddas also admitted that many of his constituents' earnings were falling. Citing the case of a "gang of Lithuanian blokes" he discovered who were earning £15 a day working on a public contract. "Migrant workers have been tacitly used to deregulate labour markets. This celebration of this flexible modern labour market that we have is not a panacea for a lot of the people I represent. It means that there is a race at the bottom of the labour market occurring". No doubt forced to confront rather than continue to evade this reality by the election of twelve BNP councillors forming the official opposition on Barking and Dagenham Council, the Labour deputy leadership contender conceded that the BNP is right.

Labour MP acknowledges BNP raises valid issues

Globalisation leads to immigration. Cheap migrant workers undercut the wages of the British workforce and lowers our standard of living.

This is what British Nationalists have been saying for the last fifty years. Now those responsible are starting at last to admit that we were right all along. The catalyst for this has been the increasing awakening of the British people who are the victims. Having admitted we are right, what is Mr Cruddas going to do about it? Absolutely nothing.

He can't because his own party, The Labour Party, led by those he rightly accused of "living in a parallel world", is, as much as the Tories and Liberal Democrats, a party in thrall to globalising capitalism on which it depends for funding.

It's ABC – Anything But Christian!

AN all-girls school in the old market town of Horsham in the heart of Sussex has ordered its Christian pupils to stop wearing purity rings.

The ring, which signifies that its wearer pledges chastity before marriage, has been banned on the basis that the silver rings would infringe its jewellery policy, which only allows for ear studs to be worn.

Muslim headscarf is school uniform

CHRISTIAN girls will be ordered to wear Muslim headscarves at a new school in Leicester.

Madani High School describes itself as 'an Islamic school', but it will still teach Church of England and Catholic children who live locally. Principal Zainab Elgazari said: "I can't see why if a student wears a headscarf it should be an issue. It is just part of our uniform." Leicester City Council said that wearing Muslim headscarves would not deter Christian parents from sending children to the school... but it would say that wouldn't it! Its Education spokesman is Hussein Suleman, who just happens to be on the school's governing body.

But just like in George Orwell's Animal Farm, it appears that all pupils at Millais Secondary School are equal, but some attending the school are more equal than others.

If you are a Sikh young lady you will be allowed to wear a kara bangle, which signifies restraint against doing evil, and if you are a Muslim you will be allowed to wear a headscarf.

To many parents, the actions of the school smacks of institutionalised anti-Christianism. In fact, one of the parents went so far as to say, "It's a discriminatory policy. There is a culture of discrimination in this country against Christians. It's ABC

– Anything But Christian."

Christian pupils feel betrayed and justifiably so.

The girls must be wondering why, in a society reeling from an epidemic of under-age pregnancies and where the sexualisation of children in the media is bordering on child abuse, their simple statement of wearing a ring promising to remain chaste until marriage is not welcomed and encouraged.

They must also be concerned that the religions of incomers are given precedence over the established religion of the host nation.

UNEQUAL RELIGIONS: To many parents, Millais School's banning of purity rings smacks of an institutionalised anti-Christian attitude.

Hit back at Heinz

FOR over a hundred years HP Sauce has been labelled with a picture of the Houses of Parliament and has proudly proclaimed that it is made in Britain and used in the restaurant of the House of Commons.

Now Heinz, the US based global multinational corporation into whose clutches the saucemaker fell into long ago, is to stop making it in Britain - but they are refusing to remove the symbol of Britain on the label that sells the sauce.

Heinz Foods Corporation is closing the HP plant in Birmingham and throwing 125 Britons on to the dole. The sauce will now be made in the Netherlands and imported into its country of origin, but Heinz is insisting on keeping our Parliament on the label.

The company claim that the fact that the sauce isn't British any more will be clear from the label which will now say 'Made in the Netherlands' on it - no doubt in tiny writing and a lot less obvious than the picture of Parliament.

Our readers should answer this latest multinational sauce by refusing to use HP sauce any more.

Needless to say Labour, Conservative and Liberal Democrat MPs will continue giving credence to this foreign rip-off by continuing to use HP Sauce in the House of Commons. Let's hope it chokes them!

Ethnic quotas on Government contracts

COMPANIES bidding for Government contracts will fail if they do not employ enough black and Asian workers. The new instructions come from the Ethnic Minority Employment Task Force, which monitors seven government departments. Iqbal Wahhab, the chairman of the Ethnic Minority Advisory Group, a government-funded think-tank, said the move was necessary. "These new procurement policies assist employers in making more enlightened recruitment decisions," - which really means making employers employ more ethnic workers. It is the first time that 'positive vetting' in procurement has been approved by a British Government and the move was attacked by the British National Party, A BNP spokesman said: "This is the implementation of ethnic quotas in the workplace and discriminates against white workers. Companies should be allowed to employ the best person for the job, not be forced to take on someone just because of the colour of their skin."

Belfast jobs go to Toronto

THE Belfast aircraft manufacturer Shorts, is axing 645 jobs. The factory is owned by Canadian firm Bombardier which, despite seeing an increase in orders for the Dash 8-Q400 turboprop which is made at the Belfast factory, have decided to move the jobs nearer home to its Toronto factory.

SHORTS: Dash 8-Q400 turboprop.

Shorts has a long history of aircraft production. In the years before and during the Second World War, the company was famous for its flying boats such as the Sunderland, the Kent, the Empire and the Solent. Later came the Belfast, a heavy four turboprop-engined cargo aircraft, the Skyvan and the SD330 and SD360, which also flew in airliner variants, as well as small freighter aircraft. The Short Brothers (Eustace and Oswald) established Britain's first aerodrome in 1909 and began the first ever aircraft production line in the world when it began making replica Wright Type A biplanes. This latest news deals a severe blow to a company whose proud history stretches back 97 years and is another nail in the coffin of British aviation.

Lottery funds Portuguese newspaper

THE 1 million-strong Portuguese population living in Britain has now got its own national newspaper, courtesy of funds provided by the British public. As Noticias, which was launched last month from an office in Thetford in Norfolk, is backed by the Keystone Development Trust which gets its money from the EEC and the National Lottery. Editor Eurico Rosa, will run the publication supported by 16 journalists with the purpose of helping Portuguese immigrants settling in East Anglia and London to access the services this country provides. "Portuguese migrants depend heavily upon the Portuguese language to survive and communicate, and our new newspaper will play a vital role helping with their integration into the community," explained Keystone Project Manager Joao de Noronha.

TUC too busy demonstrating against BNP councillors to save local jobs

STEEL: The Barking factory made filing cabinets and display shelves.

WHILE the TUC was busy demonstrating outside Barking and Dagenham Council against the 12 British National Party councillors sitting in the chamber, 72 local workers were losing their jobs at Barking's Arcelor steel factory. The company's site in River Road, Thames View, will no longer be used to process steel and the jobs are being off-shored to a cheap labour country. Steel was shipped into the factory via a private wharf and then cut and processed before being shipped to manufacturing companies who use it to make a range of products including filing cabinets and supermarket display shelves. Workers at the factory warned unions 12 months ago that Arcelor, which took over the local Welbeck Steel works in 2003, was running the business down and redundancies looked on the cards. But apparently the trade unions weren't interested because they were too busy preparing plans to lobby Barking voters against supporting BNP candidates at the forthcoming local elections.

Big business recruits Polish labour to undercut British workers

ON THE very day that unemployment levels in Britain hit the highest level for six years, the TUC was heading for Poland to sign up thousands of Polish workers to the Union before they come to Britain.

Thirty giant companies including Tesco, First Group, and the Jurys Doyle and Macdonald hotel groups are encouraging Polish nationals to apply for vacancies that the firms currently have in the UK. It is big business, seeking to pay the lowest wages it possibly can, that promotes the lie that British workers will not do certain jobs.

Our home-grown workforce will do any job, from cleaning toilets on trains, washing glasses in hotels and stacking shelves in supermarkets - provided the wage is a decent one. Therein lies the crux of the matter - there are 1.7 million unemployed workers in Britain yet these mega-rich companies are seeking to import Polish workers who will work for the minimum wage. Even TUC General Secretary Brendan Barber, admitted that Poles and other migrant workers become "sitting CHEAP LABOUR: The TUC wants to sign up migrant workers to boost its flagging membership and keep those union dues rolling in.

ducks for employers who delight in making money out of exploiting vulnerable workers." So why isn't the TUC campaigning against migrant labour coming here and for the rights of British workers? It's simple. The TUC is in Warsaw because union membership has declined in recent decades as Britain's manufacturing base has been destroyed. Just as this Labour Government is busy replacing, by way of an open door immigration policy, the electorate with a Third World population more likely to vote Labour, the trade union movement is seeking to boost its flagging numbers with migrant workers. Every paid-up union member should reconsider their membership of an organisation which no longer speaks for them, no longer represents them and is a key player in the destruction of traditional British society and the British economy. It's time for a union which will defend British workers and help secure British jobs.

Are you donating to the Labour Party?

IF YOU are you a member of a trade union which is affiliated to the TUC there is every chance you are paying a political levy from your subscriptions.

The levy goes towards the Political Fund, which in turn is mainly handed over to the Labour Party. AS many as 73% of trade union members who belong to an affiliated trade union, belong to one with a Political Fund and there are more than sixty unions which pay cash to support the Labour Party. This political levy is taken from the subscription each member pays, but YOU don't have to pay it. If you wish to contract out of making this donation to Labour then send the form below, by recorded delivery, to your trade union. For those unhappy with those representing them, there is another option.

WORKERS BETRAYED: Labour Party policy has flooded Britain with migrant workers undercutting wages and putting local people on the dole.

A new Trade Union has been formed and it is called Solidarity. At the moment it doesn't have a political fund but it has pledged that, if such a fund is established, the membership will decide which political party their donations shall go to. Solidarity has also pledged that it will not discriminate against British National Party members. This new trade union will represent all workers and is dedicated to improve wages and conditions. Many long-standing trade unionists fed-up with the cronyism and corruption of TUC bosses have signed up to Solidarity which makes it very clear that it does not recognise the TUC. Solidarity is 'one big union' organising and representing workers in all economic sectors such as miners, health workers, teachers, railway workers and postmen. If you want to stay in your existing union then opt out of the political levy to the Labour Party. If you want a trade union that won't discriminate against the BNP then join Solidarity. SCAM: Adverts in Eastern European airlines' inflight magazines encourage Poles to exploit the system.

Poles get their tax back!

LABOUR'S claim that migrant workers contribute to the economy through the tax they pay is just another lie.

The majority of Polish workers end up not paying any tax at all because they return to Poland for three months at the end of each tax year, enabling them to claim back almost all of the tax they have paid when their earnings are spread over the year.

This is why many migrant workers are quite happy to undercut the British workforce by working for the minimum wage or less because they know by manipulating the system they end up better off.

A Polish worker for instance, will work for nine months on the minimum wage keeping expenses to the minimum by sleeping in multi-occupied rooms with other migrant workers. All the time, sending a major proportion of their earnings back home via money transfer agents Western Union.

Then it's back to Poland for three months, living on their savings in a country where wages are just a quarter of those paid in Britain.

While away, an agency in London gets any tax paid back from the Inland Revenue. For the new tax year, it's back to Britain to once again undercut British workers and exploit our tax and benefits system.

WIZZ AIR: Bringing up to 540 Polish workers a week to Britain.

Cheap labour gets fast tracked to the West Midlands

WIZZ AIR the largest low-fare airline in Central and Eastern Europe has announced a new service, using the 180-seater Airbus A320 aircraft, of three flights a week from Katowice in south Poland to Coventry.

This fast-tracking of Polish workers through the airport in Baginton to the West Midlands job market will begin in July and will further hit an already beleaguered local workforce who for the past three years have seen wages undercut by the flood of migrant workers to the region.

Free Speech Trial

DAY ONE:
PEOPLE came from as far away as Cornwall and Scotland to show their support for Nick Griffin and Mark Collett as the second Free Speech trial got under way, albeit two days late, at Leeds Crown Court on Wednesday November 3rd. The delay undoubtedly reduced the numbers of those attending the demonstration of support, with many booking a day off work and train tickets for the Monday. But there was still a sea of flags and posters including front pages of Freedom and everyone was wearing a poppy. The Recorder of Leeds Crown Court, Judge Norman Jones, enters Court 8 at 10.45 am and the jury of five men and seven women is sworn in, but then the case adjourned.

DAY TWO:
Rodney Jameson QC, opens the prosecution case explaining how a BBC undercover agent, Jason Gwynne, joined the party and attended "many BNP events". His opening is a little more subdued than last time. Clearly the events and shift in political debate which have occurred since January have changed what the prosecution think they can present as credible. Back in January he tried to imply that any criticism of multiculturalism was beyond the pale, almost evidence in itself of either criminality or insanity, but not any more. Now, in order to retain the slightest credibility, he feels compelled to admit that there are "inevitable stresses and strains" in a multicultural society. He concludes by 11.10 am and the jury are shown three BNP speeches. The Crown doesn't call Jason Gwynne this time or any other witnesses, no one who was offended or insulted, no one who was 'threatened', no police officer with any evidence of any kind of public disturbance, no one at all. The Prosecution case is closed by ten past twelve and the case is adjourned until a quarter past ten on Monday.

DAY THREE:
Mark is called to the witness box by his Silk, Stuart Lawson-Rogers and after he swears on the Bible his defence gets under way again. He is asked to describe his education and how he got involved with the BNP, before he is taken through the two speeches that he faces charges on. The defence is clear that he was seeking not to incite 'hate' but to persuade new members and enquirers to get actively involved and to help advance our cause through the democratic political process. As part of Mark's bundle of evidence for the jury is, among other things, the Home Office Joint Tenancy Agreement, which shows the huge list of handouts and luxuries given to asylum seekers in private accommodation (at taxpayers' expense). At 12.15 Rodney Jameson QC, begins his cross-examination. The two joust over the press cuttings and speeches. Mark argues that the Prosecution is cherry-picking instead of taking the speech as a whole. Asked a question on his use of the word 'pride' and why it's important that white people especially should have pride, Mark responds: "When there are Asian Pride Melas or Black History Month they get a round of applause from The Guardian and leftists, but when we talk of pride among white people this is 'racist'." Court is adjourned for the day 2.55 pm.

DAY FOUR:
Nick begins his defence telling Timothy King QC, for the defence, that in speeches to BNP members and supporters he had been trying to explain to his audience the distinction between different groups of Asians, as well as recruiting new Party activists. The grooming, drugging and rape of more than 60 white schoolgirls by young Asian men in Keighley, West Yorkshire (the venue for his 2004 speech) had not been the work of Sikhs or Hindus, he said. "This is not a racial thing, it's not an Asian thing, it's a cultural and religious thing," he said. The message of his speech had been that "if people don't get involved politically, then the problem is going to get worse". Nick, who has a Cambridge degree in history and law, pointed out verses from the Koran that supported his stance on Islam and its aims. The jury were then shown four videos Islam in Burnley (1999), Al Qaeda UK (2003) and Edge of the City (2004) which all backed up Nick's argument. The jury also saw the video Dirty Kaffur by Sheik Terra which called for the beheading of the BNP leader.

DAY FIVE:
Nick is cross-examined by Rodney Jameson QC, who questioned him about his view of Islam. When asked if he accepted there was a moderate majority within the Muslim community in Britain, he replied "most definitely not". "These people as individuals are not bad, it's just that they are culturally and religiously programmed, and programmed as a community, so that when the preachers and the Imams flick the switch they go into Muslim overdrive, flick the switch and there is trouble." Mr Jameson asked: "Do you accept that Islam has a strong, tolerant and moderate strand?" "No," Mr Griffin replied. "That's a politically correct nonsense." Mark's brief then sums up his defence and the proceedings are adjourned

DAY SIX:
The summing up of Nick's defence is followed by the Judges direction to the jury, their deliberation and the verdict.

£4,500 raised with a great evening's entertainment

by Richard Chadfield

ON FRIDAY 13th October, Stockport and Tameside units of the British National Party staged their second fund raising supper theatre.

The evening's event took place at a large Stockport venue whose staff and customers are friendly and supportive, a clear indication that political times are changing and the old barriers against the BNP are starting to crumble.

A supper theatre is a fun way to spend an evening making money for next May's local elections. The basic requirements are a large venue with a stage, a bar, a simple meal and a night's stage entertainment provided by the numerous talented amateur performers within the ranks of the British National Party. News of just how good the last supper theatre was had got around and all 150 tickets were quickly snapped up. Master of ceremonies David Gough, started off the evening's fun by introducing star vocalist Jason, who belted out a selection of hits from yester-year.

After Jason's high octane performance it was time to slow things down a little and Tameside fund holder, historian and author David Jones, was called on stage to conduct another of his much loved but impossibly difficult quizzes. Wigan group walked off with the winner's prize.

The quiz was followed by William

GREAT EVENING: Tameside member Peter Hampson, paid £160 to sit at the top table with Nick and Jackie. He said the experience was worth every penny.

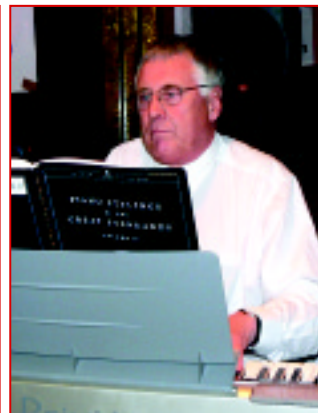

Davies who at just fifteen years old is one of our star performers. William is a gifted saxophone player with tremendous stage presence and he had every one on their feet applauding his playing.

During dinner there was a soothing classical rendition by our very own concert pianist (and National Press Officer) Doctor Phil Edwards.

After dinner BNP Chairman Nick Griffin, was called on stage to 'sing for his supper'. Nick sang an old English folk song in praise of the brewer of ale. Good though all these acts were the star performance of the evening came from the BNP

Chicks - two talented and beautiful young ladies who grabbed every one's attention with their singing and dancing.

It was all good fun, however the object of the evening was to raise money for the local election fund, so throughout the evening raffle tickets were sold. The main prize was a 20 inch T.V and the second prize a D.V.D recorder. Jackie Griffin drew the winning raffle tickets and then her husband conducted a Dutch auction which raised a record sum from the assembled audience. This brought the total taking for quite a memorable evening to £4,500.

LEAFLET: A hard-hitting cartoon shows voters where Labour's loyalties lie.

New leaflet attacks Labour on housing and hospital beds

LABOUR are flooding Barking & Dagenham with immigrants in a desperate effort to cling to power.

A new BNP leaflet being distributed in the borough reports that in the last five months over 2000 new names have been added to the electoral register and 80% are foreign names. "Just look around you and decide for yourself" asks the leaflet. "Can you see the population changing. Are these new arrivals British people or immigrants?"

Called You Decide, the leaflet says a BNP controlled council would give local people priority in housing and stop any more immigrants from settling in the borough.

News that the local Health Trust is to LOSE almost 200 beds and has had its budget cut back again, also comes under fire. The leaflet points out:

"With the extra housing and rising population here in Barking & Dagenham we need our own general hospital. Instead, the local NHS is facing cuts of over £14 million."

Barking & Dagenham British National Party councillor Richard Barnbrook, reports that the leaflet has been well received.

"Residents know the BNP is telling them the truth. They can see it with their own eyes. Time is running out fast for those Labour liars running the council."

BNP 'up and running' in East Hertfordshire

NEW GROUP: East Herts organiser Steven Johnson, opens the meeting for BNP members in Hertford, Ware and Bishops Stortford.

LAST month saw the inaugural meeting of East Hertfordshire BNP attended by almost forty members and supporters. This new group covers an affluent area of Hertfordshire, covering towns such as Hertford, Ware and Bishops Stortford.

After an introductory speech on local issues, organiser Steven Johnson, introduced the first of the three speakers.

Councillor Julian Leppert, spoke first with great humour of his experiences as a local councillor in the London Borough of Redbridge. His report on multiculturalism both in his ward and further afield gave everyone at the meeting a stark reminder of what is happening in and around the Hainault area. He was both witty and thought provoking and had everybody laughing out loud at the ludicrous decisions he has seen made by the politically correct Lib/Lab/Con brigade he faces at council level.

Next up to speak was the National Elections Officer and Eastern Regional Organiser Eddy Butler, whose knowledge of grass roots electioneering was obvious to all. Eddy went on to give a full rundown of forthcoming events in the region and emphasised that it was essential for groups and branches to work together in the run up and particularly during the next set of elections. He also stressed the need for door to door activism, both in leafletting and paper sales, which he said helps in recruitment and fundraising for the Party.

EDDY BUTLER: Stressed the need for door to door activism, both in leafletting and paper sales.

After a short break the main speaker Richard Edmonds, spoke with his usual enthusiasm on the need for nationalism on all levels. Referring to a newspaper cutting about how native British residents in an East London road had moved away over the years and how it had changed the area out of all recognition, he said that sadly this was happening in nearly every town and city in Britain today. Richard also reported on the increasing levels of 'white flight' to Home County areas such as East Herts, which was occurring due to spiralling immigration, rising crime and general disillusionment with nearly ten years under this 'New' Labour government.

"We went to war on a lie"

Lawrence Rustem gives an interview to the Turkish language press

BARKING British National Party councillor Lawrence Rustem, has given an exclusive interview to a Turkish language newspaper after a visit to Cyprus for the funeral of his Turkish Cypriot father. It was the first visit to the island by the British-born 32 year-old, who was raised by his mother after his parents separated 30 years ago.

When asked about his inspiration to become a politician, Lawrence, who joined the BNP when he was seventeen, said that when he was studying politics at Greenwich University he discovered that it was the unbridled liberalism which pervaded all the mainstream parties, that was responsible for many of the problems the country faced today. Lawrence's views on a range of topics was reported in the newspaper.

Europe: "Labour and the Tories have surrendered this country's sovereignty to Brussels. There must be a complete withdrawal from the European Union and this is one of the main policies of the BNP."

The Iraq War: "Weapons of mass destruction never existed. We went to war on a lie, and now over one hundred British soldiers and 600,000 Iraqis have lost their lives."

Immigration: If people come to Britain then they must conform to the British culture. If they can't then they must leave. I believe there should be financial incentives to encourage those who don't want to assimilate to return from whence they came.

The Media: "You can't trust the British media. The National Union of Journalists has its own anti-BNP agenda which it pursues relentlessly even if this means it has to be economical with the truth." When the Turkish journalist pointed out that as the British population was growing old, shouldn't Britain be welcoming immigrants to bolster the workforce, Lawrence replied: "I think we should follow France's example and encourage much larger families by generous tax allowance schemes. It's much better for British couples to have more children, rather than relying on importing foreigners who have no loyalty to this country."

VIEWPOINT

False analysis of 'race crime' data

by Tony Shell

OFFICIAL British Crime Survey statistics show that, over the last few years, the white community has suffered levels of racist crime of between 36 and 100 times greater than should be expected (compared to that suffered within the minority ethnic communities).

The Government gives a false analysis of this data, thus obscuring this disturbing fact. Similarly the Crown Prosecution Service replicates this culture of denial by falsely characterising racist crime as crime perpetrated by white people against the ethnic minority community.

The way in which murder cases are reported (or ignored) is especially alarming. Since the murder of Stephen Lawrence in 1993, the focus has been on the racist murder of members of the minority ethnic communities. However it is overwhelmingly the white community that suffers most – more white people are murdered by members of the ethnic minority community than vice-versa – despite there being approximately ten times more white people.

Over the last nine years more white people have been victims of racist murder than people from the ethnic minorities.

This problem of rapidly increasing magnitude may not even be the whole picture as there are indications (based on comparisons of interracial and racist murder) that racist murders of members of the white community are being significantly under-reported.

Since when were asylum seekers 'Children in Need'?

by Julia Green

EVER wonder where the money goes to for Children in Need?

Well I have discovered that large sums of money from the BBC's big night of fund-raising is going to support overseas organisations who directly or indirectly deal with asylum seekers. Money has also been spent on similar projects such as 'Refugee Action' which received £232,227 thanks to the Beeb's efforts.

Children in Need raises millions of pounds each year, money which the general public thinks goes to helping British children in need.

But last year over £1 million of the public's money which was donated to Children in Need ended up in the bank accounts of organisations specifically set up to look after refugees and asylum seekers when they arrive in this country.

One example of a donation made through Children in Need in 2005 was £100,023 that was given to the Refugee Arrivals Project (RAP). This is an independent 'charity' set up to assist newly arrived asylum seekers and refugees, and employs 70 staff in addition to a pool of interpreters.

Each week between 100 and 120 asylum seekers are placed in accommodation in West London until they can be dispersed into the community. In 2004, the government paid around £108,000 to help fund this operation - money which comes from the taxpayers of this country.

Now, money raised for Children in Need, is being siphoned off and used to pay for accommodation for asylum seekers, enabling the Government to expand its funding for the never-ending queue of immigrants arriving in this country.

According to the National Audit office over £9 million was paid out last year to fund organisations assisting asylum seekers with housing, jobs and welfare needs.

Needless to say the BBC on its Children in Need website makes no reference to the fact that money being donated for the needs of British children is ending up in the pockets of foreigners. If people knew this, they wouldn't be so quick to give.

SALLY WOOD

Straight talking!

Black Hysteria Month

IT'S been that time of the year when 'Black History Month' surfaces yet again, although I just don't know how one month can be long enough to cram in all their contributions.

The latest it seems, according to The Guardian, is that 25,000 years ago Africans pioneered basic arithmetic deep in the Congo. I'm not quite sure what exactly is meant by 'basic' as I'm pretty sure that our own ancestors at that time, having ten fingers, were capable of addition and subtraction.

Perhaps it's not that basic? Maybe some Africans deep in the jungle were mulling over quadratic equations which would certainly be awesome stuff. I am intrigued however, how any evidence has come to light of this ancient arithmetical flowering. Did someone stumble upon a fossilised set of log tables or unearth an ancient slide rule?

It seems now there is dissent over Black History Month as others want a piece of the action. Some local authorities want to re-label it 'Black and Asian History Month' but this hasn't gone down too well. There seems little interest in certain quarters to share this special month, and moves are afoot to keep it solely devoted to 'Black' propaganda.

Why not then give the Asians their own separate month and while we're about it why not give a month to all the other ethnic groups here? We could have a Chinese and Polish History Month. The list is endless and that in itself would pose a problem as unfortunately it wouldn't take long to run out of months, especially once we started to cater for all those who have flocked to our shores.

Of course it's our own people who are the only ones who need to be educated in celebrating a 'Pride in British History' project. It's OUR young people who need to regain their lost self esteem.

Graffiti taunts our society

AM I alone in considering graffiti to be an affront to the eye? When travelling by train to London I always like to gaze from the window to spot the alterations that have taken place to the landscape since the time I once lived there when young.

Increasingly though, I realise that it is not so much the buildings which stand out as having changed but the amount of graffiti defacing the railway property, which increases in intensity the nearer one gets to London.

Indeed it seems to reach a peak of intensity around the Brixton area where nearly every spare inch of railway property at the side of the line appears to be daubed in the stuff and it actually overflows onto the nearby buildings. It even makes an appearance as the train passes under an old Victorian bridge as it defaces its mellow brickwork: an unwelcome intrusion from the 21st century.

The station platforms in London bristle with an armoury of security cameras, so why if it is a criminal offence to deface public or private property are not the perpetrators of these criminal acts hunted down and made to clean off their defilement? If as a society we are prepared to tolerate low level criminality it emboldens the criminal to move on to more serious offences.

Whilst graffiti remains it taunts society with its message - 'Look what I can do and get away with!'

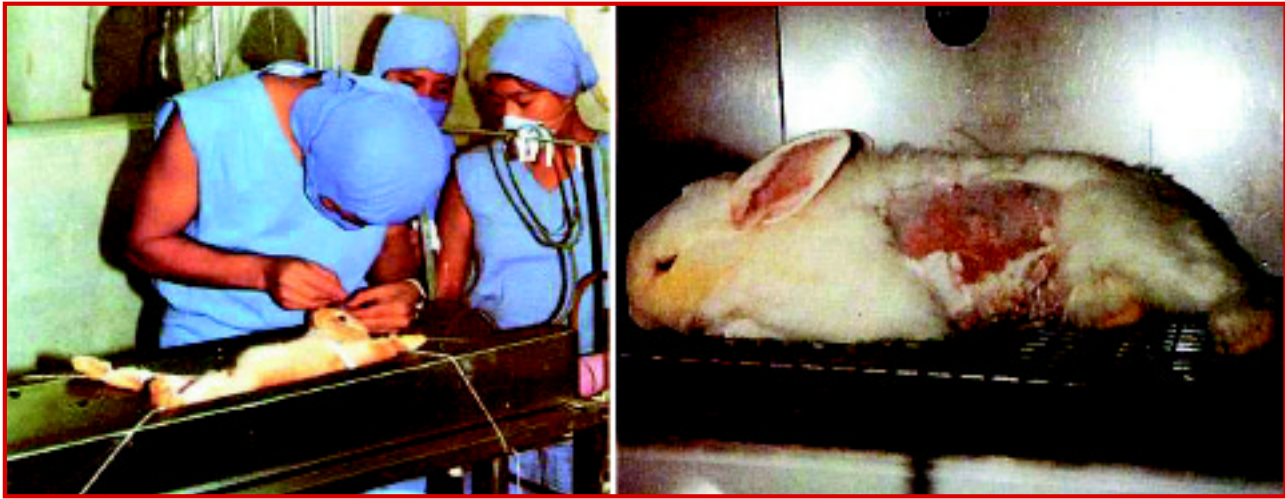

Reclaim our faith schools

I WENT to a Church School as a child and I well remember the experience. Once a week the Vicar would arrive to take the RE lesson. We were expected to bring our bibles along and woe betide anyone who forgot. Prayer books would be given out and we were expected to learn the catechism and chant it by heart. On Ascension day the whole school would be taken to Church for a Christian Service.

I find it hard to believe that any Christian teaching takes place at Headfield Church of England School in Dewsbury, now famed for its veiled teaching assistant. Does the vicar ever call? Are the children ever taken to Church? It seems to me that it is a Church school in name only, and how can it be otherwise when it seems that most of the 546 pupils are of Pakistani heritage.

The government is proposing legislation which will make it compulsory for faith schools to take 25% of children from other faiths. But what is really needed is a law that ensures all our schools stay Christian and take no more than 25% of children from non-Christian faiths.

If we can reclaim our faith schools, it is a first step to reclaiming the community that surrounds them.

UNNECESSARY: The EU is inflicting suffering on animals to test old chemicals that have been harmlessly in use for decades, just so some foreign bureaucrat can tick a box on a health and safety form.

European Union orders needless animal experiments

by Steve Johnson

The European Union has ordered tens of millions of rabbits, mice and guinea pigs to be tortured and killed in cruel and needless experiments to serve the latest piece of pointless Brussels bureaucracy.

The new Brussels Registration Evaluation and Authorization of Chemicals directive means that all chemicals used in household products, from toys to shampoo, which haven't already been tested on animals must be so tested or be banned. This means anything used for longer than the past 25 years in which those tests have been enforced by the EU must now be tested. It is common sense that if there was anything genuinely harmful to humans in household products in everyday use for more than a quarter of a century (in some cases for many centuries) it would have become evident by now. But nevertheless this has not stopped the Eurocrats. When this Directive comes into force next April it will unleash an unprecedented orgy of cruelty to animals. Chemicals will be dropped into the eyes of agonised rabbits until they go blind. Burning irritants will be rubbed into the skins of whimpering guinea pigs. Mice will be deliberately given cancer. Pregnant rabbits will be injected with chemicals so their babies are born dead. Animals will be exposed to higher and higher doses of chemicals, far beyond anything humans would ever come anywhere near encountering in real life, to see how much it takes to hurt, harm and slowly and painfully kill them. And all the while cold-eyed Brussels bureaucrats callously note each detail of the animals' agony on their clipboards.

BOUQUET OF BARBED WIRE

Estimates of the number of harmless animals who must suffer and die in this pointless piece of pen-pushing sadism range from the chemical industry's 16 million to the 45 million victims expected by Germany's Institute for Risk Management.

The Royal Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals says it is 'horrified' by the animal experimentation Brussels plans to unleash. But Britain's political parties currently in the European Parliament are voting to unleash the vivisection and animal torturers regardless. Labour always backed the new directive and now the Tories have done a U-turn and David Cameron has ordered the 26 Tory Euro-MPs to vote for it as well. Whatever the issues surrounding testing of new chemicals and drugs on animals, there is no excuse for causing suffering on this scale to test old chemicals, harmlessly in use for decades, just so some foreign bureaucrat can tick a box on a health and safety form.

This latest piece of sadistic sickness from the alien pen-pushers to which Labour, Tory and Lib-Dems have surrendered the sovereignty of Britain, is just one more reason to support the British National Party. The BNP will set Britain free from the European Union lunatic asylum. People across Europe have suffered economically long enough at the hands of this bureaucratic nation-destroying monster, and now our animals are to cruelly suffer also.

No hiding place for our red squirrel

Britain's native red squirrel faces extinction because of a deadly disease brought to this country by the imported American grey squirrel.

Squirrel poxvirus is spread by the grey invader, which carries antibodies to the virus making it immune from infection. The red squirrel possesses no such antibodies and dies within 15 days of being infected.

This disease is seen as a significant factor in the decline of the red squirrel in England, but now the disease has been spread north to Scotland by greys migrating from Cumbria.

Scotland is home to 75% of the red squirrel population, but the species could become extinct there by the end of the century unless measures are taken to protect the habitat of the red squirrel and encourage the grey whilst discouraging the grey.

The red squirrel, which prefers coniferous woodland but will also live in broadleaved woods where no greys are present, is currently found in Wales, on the south coast of England, East Anglia, Durham, Northumbria, Cumbria and Scotland. It is protected by the Wildlife and Countryside Act, is a UK Biodiversity Action Plan priority species and is listed on Appendix III of the Berne Convention (protected fauna species).

Support farmers raising traditional livestock

Britain's oldest breed of pig is on the endangered list because of an increase in pork and bacon imports from Denmark.

The Tamworth, a highly distinctive pig with a reddish brown coat and erect ears, originated in the West Midlands area from which it takes its name. It is the only red pig native to Britain, and is noted for the high quality of its pork and bacon, in particular the dry cured variety.

It has a long snout and is the closest remaining breed to the old British forest pig which, unlike many other breeds of British pig, has not been crossed with Oriental breeds.

But now there are less than 167 breeding sows remaining, leading TAMWORTH: Closest remaining breed to Britain's old forest pig.

the Rare Breeds Survival Trust (RBST) to class the Tamworth as "an endangered species."

The RBST was formed to restore Britain's native breeds of livestock, and promote their value to the public. Local independent butchers are accredited by the Traditional Breeds Meat Marketing Company to stock meat from rare British breeds.

This meat comes from small, local farms where animal welfare is of prime importance, and the animal does not have to endure long journeys to be slaughtered. By marketing the local food, wealth is generated in the local area and is beneficial to the rural economy.

Educating consumers to ensure that the meat they buy comes, if possible, from rare British breeds such as the Tamworth pig helps to aid the survival and encourage the practice of farming traditional livestock.

Your country needs you!

DURING THE FESTIVITIES this Christmas, please take time out to reflect on what is going on around you. Whether you are with your family on Christmas Day enjoying your roast turkey, shopping with your excited children, or experiencing that very special sense of Christmas at a carol concert, please just pause and savour the moment and think back to all those Christmas celebrations that have gone before.

Here in Britain, this is still a special time for us. And by us, I mean the silent majority of this country who live their lives in accordance with the basic Christian values and tenets that have guided the population of these islands for centuries.

But those values, and our traditional festivities such as Christmas and Easter, are under threat. In almost every town and city in this country, our Christian heritage is gradually being dismantled by those seeking to promote a more politically correct multi-faith agenda. Each and every year a little bit more of Christmas gets 'chipped away' by the PC lobby, whether it's the Nativity, religious symbols within Christmas decorations, carol services, town centre Christmas trees or even Santa's reindeer.

If you look back at the way Christmas was celebrated ten years ago and compared it to what happens today, you would see quite clearly how the traditional Christian ethos of the festivities is being eroded.

So when you take this time to reflect, hopefully you will look around and think to yourself - 'yes, this is a good time of the year'. I hope you will also think of what you can do to make sure this heritage is handed down to future generations.

The May local council elections need to be a watershed in British politics. If we are going to stop the steady erosion of our traditional Christian values, the British National Party needs to make a breakthrough. We need to get BNP councillors elected, and to get councillors elected we need to have good local BNP candidates prepared to stand for election. Last May, there were 356 BNP names on the ballot papers and from that number we now have over 50 councillors. This time around the number of candidates needs to be significantly increased which will lead to many more councillors being elected.

The BNP is the only political party standing up exclusively for the English, Scottish, Welsh, Irish and Ulster folk of these islands. The BNP is the only Party prepared to defend the specific culture of our people to ensure that it is handed down to our children.

The British National Party can only do this effectively if we have candidates standing in as many areas as possible to give Britain's silent majority the chance to make its voice heard.

THE British National Party's Skills & Ideas section reports increasing numbers of journalists joining our ranks.

Freedom would welcome contributions on a range of political topics that help to make the newspaper of interest to its growing readership. The purpose of Freedom is to encourage the public to vote for, support and even join the BNP. To do this effectively an easy-to-read newspaper is essential, so we would welcome short reports on specific and current news items from your local area.

If you can help, please send your copy to freedom@bnp.org.uk

FREEDOM contributor Louise Scott, has informed me of the sad death of Scarborough BNP activist Peter Taylor.

I knew Peter more than 20 years ago when he was our Leeds organiser. It was a torrid time for British Nationalism and it was only the hard work of people like Peter, and his mother, father, sister and brother, that kept our flame flickering in West Yorkshire.

Much of the work done back in the 1980s was in Morley, and it was the seeds planted by the Taylor family all those years ago that no doubt helped Chris Beverley win the Morley seat for the British National Party last May. Our thoughts are with Peter's family at this time.

TRAFALGAR CLUB OUTING: The morning after the TC dinner, there was a visit to the nearby National Coal Mining Museum. This journey into another, now almost lost, aspect of old Britain was particularly poignant coming as it did just 24 hours after the shameful announcement that the surviving fragments of British Steel are set to be taken over by an Indian venture capitalist.

English in the middle

ANTHONY Mugan, head of Bradford Council's education client team, has said that Bradford is experiencing extremely rapid inward migration from Eastern Europe.

He said that the number of school-age children from EU accession countries had increased from 500 to 600 since the start of the winter term and that the majority of these children were of primary school age.

This is leading to pressure on school places from new EU immigrants as well as the city's Asian immigrants. We now have new EU immigrants joining low-skilled Asian immigrants in competing for the limited number of unskilled jobs available. Tensions in Bradford can only increase because of this and all the while the English community is caught in the middle, dutifully paying its council tax for the benefit of others.

John R. Walker, Bradford.

Get Britain out!

AS a new member, I am very interested in all the issues outlined in your newspaper.

However I would like to read more about the BNP's plans to extricate ourselves from Europe. Once this has taken place, everything else on our political agenda will be easier to achieve.

I am especially concerned about the amount of legislation coming out of Europe which affects us, and by the amount of our money going into the EU that we are unable to account for. Doesn't it say it all that auditors have been unable to sign off EEC accounts for the last 11 years!

Britain's contribution to Brussels could be used to much better effect if it stayed in this country in the first place, Miss S. Hunt, Portsmouth.

Covering the face

THE wearing of burkas in public should be banned on the grounds of security alone.

How do we know that the wearer is not a terrorist, man or woman, with explosives strapped to their waists. How can the security forces, seeing such a figure boarding a train or aircraft, ascertain their identity?

The covering of the face is associated with criminals. Would the police allow anyone to walk round wearing a stocking or Balaclava over their faces?

George P. Avery, York

The fear of Islam

CONGRATULATIONS on yet another super publication, the last issue of Freedom - No. 77.

I note in particular the item on page 2 - BNP exposes halal meat scandal in Worcester schools.

It is shameful how this Labour Government panders to the Muslim community in every possible way and at every opportunity.

Halal meat is forbidden for Sikhs but unfortunately the Sikhs and the Hindus are muted minorities everywhere due to their fear of Islam. None within these communities will dare raise their voice above whisper level to protest at halal meat being served even to Sikh and Hindu children in public institutions.

Some years ago when a Sikh prisoner complained of being served halal meat, I took up the matter with the Governor at Wellingborough prison. His diet was altered immediately.

The British National Party could help non-Muslims by asking for the details of halal meat being served across the nation, eg. hospitals, prisons, schools and other public places serving food. One can also insist on the label HALAL being prominently displayed on all such meat dishes.

Rajinder Singh, Northampton.

BBC fuels immigration

SO Gordon Brown has decreed that he is to spend £15 million of taxpayers' money a year on a new BBC World Service television channel for Iran.

The new Arabic channel is targeted at the Farsi community of that country and will promote Britain to that section of the population.

But what on earth for? Such targeted broadcasts will only encourage the Farsi community to come to Britain. Haven't we already got an extensive enough Islamic community without adding to it?

The money would be better spent making the BBC produce a few more programmes that cater for the interests of the British people.

Margaret Rice, Brighton.

Question Time - again!

FEW people typify the twisted priorities of liberal elite better than Chris Huhne MP of the Liberal Democrats.

He made it very clear on the BBC Question Time programme that he would ignore the wishes of the vast majority of British people and always put "minority interests first".

If this is his party's line then surely it is anti-democratic and no wonder very few people except immigrants vote for this muddled party.

Despite polling poorly at the last election, the BBC allows the Lib-Dems to dominate the programme which means that Question Time is always biased toward the liberal left.

When will the programme have some British nationalist representation?

Rory Allanson, London.

Life on Mars?

NOW George Bush and Tony Blair are considering dividing Iraq into three states for the Sunis, Shias and Kurds to live within their own communities in order to end the violence and communal conflict in that country.

In other words, multiculturalism in Iraq has produced social tensions, conflict and open civil war.

However, the same Blair Government claims multiculturalism in Britain will still produce social harmony and a vibrant happy society.

Yeah, right. What planet is the Labour Party living on?

Ralph Ellis, Cheshire.

Join the Trafalgar Club

My wife and I attended the recent Trafalgar Club dinner and I would like to suggest through your columns that your readers join the Trafalgar Club.

It was a terrific do at a superb hotel, with guest speakers, one of whom was very amusing and had the audience in stitches, as well as music and a meal. Everyone was "dressed" up in dinner jackets and the ladies looked a million dollars in long evening dresses or cocktail dresses. The people were just like you and me, sensible, honest, plain speaking realists, well travelled, well educated, great fun and a good representation of the British people.

In fact we made friends with everyone we met. It was a really successful evening.

Two 'Days of Action' on the Isle of Man

OCTOBER saw a two day leafletting campaign as well as a meeting held on the Isle of Man. It was the second British National Party meeting held there, and once again the venue was a large, Victorian sea front hotel in the beautiful port town of Douglas.

More than 50 local residents attended and heard guest speaker Dave Shapcott, the BNP Burnley organiser speak about the Race Relations Act and how it is used against the white population of Britain. He told the audience that it was only a matter of time before it has the same effect on the Manx people.

After the interval during which a buffet was laid on, Blackpool BNP member Jonathan Murphy, spoke about rising immigration into Britain and the problems that it has caused from pressure on housing and local services to crime.

The leaflet campaign was organised by North West Regional Organiser Roy Goodwin and Burnley deputy organiser Chris Vanns, who with their compatriots from the mainland and a team of Manx residents, covered part of the island that had yet to receive a BNP leaflet.

Roy Goodwin said: "Our campaign of the last two days shows the British National Party's long term commitment to the Isle of Man. We are building here foundations for the future and the response we have received has been very encouraging."

SIMON DARBY: The introduction of diversity leads to the eradication of the traditional British population.

Simon Darby attacks school closures in the West Midlands

FORTY members and guests attended the October meeting of Scarborough BNP and heard from the Party's deputy leader Simon Darby.

He spoke about how 'diversity' being introduced into areas usually meant the eradication or the replacement of the traditional British population.

"The first-ever British National Party councillor was elected in Millwall ward in Tower Hamlets, east London in 1993, but now because of the huge change in the make-up of the population there, the BNP could not win the seat again," he said.

Simon also attacked Gordon Brown for handing over £8 billion of taxpayers' money for a school building programme in Africa, whilst schools in the West Midlands were having to close down because of lack of funding.

He also criticised the Government for deliberately manipulating the media to make British people feel guilty about the poverty in Africa but all the while conveniently ignoring the fact that many British pensioners are living on the breadline.

Sons of Nelson – doing what is expected!

by Richard Thrower

ON Trafalgar Day - Saturday, 21st October - the Crawley & Horsham Branch held another Day of Action, this time in the 'hideously white' (but for how long?) town of Horsham.

With three teams of activists out on the streets of this bustling town in the midst of the fertile farmland of West Sussex, we were bound to strike a cord with the local people, who have seen what has happened with the multi-culti 'enrichment' of neighbouring Crawley.

The positive response from the people on the streets was very encouraging indeed. We believe that this might have been helped by the recent story regarding Millais School, an all-girl local comprehensive, which banned its Christian pupils from wearing chastity pledge rings, whilst allowing girls of other religions to continue wearing symbols of their respective beliefs. This blatant anti-Christian bias has caused considerable resentment in the town.

Freedom sales were helped by the more vocal of our members and 35 newspapers were sold and over 1,200 leaflets distributed in the town centre and through door-to-door leafletting. The branch will be holding regular activities in Horsham, as well as maintaining a concentrated leafletting and canvassing campaign in the area. If you would like to help in saving our country and our culture then please do give us a call on 07952 942402 for further details about activities in our part of Sussex. The British National Party is the ONLY Party offering a future for the indigenous people of Britain. Nelson won and so will we, but only with stout British 'hearts of oak', so come and join us!

Pendle top £1,500 in fundraising week

PENDLE BNP organiser Tom Boocock, raised £450 for branch funds with a sponsored run of 20 laps of a local crescent which amounted to 10 miles in total.

Together with other donations in support of the special 'Branch Play-Offs' fundraising week a grand total of a staggering £1,500.00 has been raised by Pendle BNP.

After the run Tom admitted his legs were 'shot to bits' but he was pleased to be able to reach his target.

"I'm glad I was able to manage all 20 laps and it was a boost when some local members and supporters joined in to accompany me on the occasional lap. It certainly helped keep my spirits up," he said.

Later that evening there was a social with a buffet and a pub quiz where Tom was presented with a framed photograph of him doing his fundraising run.

SPONSORED RUN: Flags and cheers greet Tom Boocock as he completes another lap of a local crescent in his 10 mile marathon to help raise funds for Pendle BNP.

BNP's first elections step into inner-city Manchester

BNP Percentage 5.6%

by Richard Chadfield

THE newly reformed Manchester unit of the British National Party contested its first council election on Thursday October 19th in the inner city ward of Gorton South.

The BNP candidate was a local businessman, Derek Adams, who polled 5.6% of the vote, beating the Greens and receiving twice as many votes as the Tory candidate.

A third of the ward's voters are from the ethnic minorities, so the BNP campaign was very low key and conducted by just a handful of activists. Fighting the election was essentially an activity to get the reformed unit up and running again.

The seat was a real marginal and the contest provided a desperate struggle between Labour and the Liberal-Democrats, who were defending the seat, so party workers were bussed in from all over the North-West.

DEREK ADAMS: Twice the Tory vote.

The old gang parties have always regarded Manchester's inner city wards as their fiefdom, places where the BNP would never be able to campaign - but they now know that this is not the case.

At the count both Labour's North West MEP, Arlene McCarthy, and Manchester Gorton M.P., Gerald Kaufman, expressed their dismay that the British National Party had been able to take third place in the election in Gorton South.

60 at Carlisle meeting

BURNLEY organiser David Shapcott was the guest speaker at a meeting of the Carlisle group of the British National Party on October 18th.

Sixty members met in a city centre pub, where it was announced that for the first time the BNP would be fielding candidates in May's local council elections in the city.

Two candidates are already busy working in their wards and another two members are considering standing.

Anti-BNP bash scrapped

AN ANTI-BNP group had to cancel its planned meeting in Northampton. 'Race Action Northampton' had ambitiously booked the town's Guildhall and the leader of the Labour group on Northampton Borough Council Lee Barron, as guest speaker, to launch its campaign against the British National Party. But just hours before he was due to give his talk, 'Combating the BNP in the Workplace', Barron was told it was off because of a lack of interest from the public.

Inaugural meeting of Arun BNP

THE inaugural meeting of the Arun, Chichester and Worthing Unit of the British National Party was held on Monday, October 9th. The meeting, which was attended by 23 members, was addressed by the BNP's South East regional organiser Roger Robertson, and prospective municipal candidate Dr Andrew Emerson. Dr Emerson told the meeting that the British National Party was the only party that offered the British people a real choice at the ballot box. He said that stopping any further immigration was the only way to avert the impending strife and civil unrest that would follow from the overpopulation of many parts of our country due to the lack of any border controls. Three new members were signed up at the meeting, and a collection raised over £60.

Meeting in Preston

LAST month Preston BNP held its first meeting for over two years. Top of the agenda for the new organiser David Pearson, were next May's local council elections in the town. Around 50 local members attended and as well as contributions from local speakers, North West Regional Organiser Roy Goodwin, gave a report on the progress of the British National Party in the region.

Successful papersale at the Heathway in Dagenham

ON Saturday 16th October 2006, Barking & Dagenham BNP held a very successful paper sale at the 'Heathway' in Dagenham. Even though the Heathway has been 'diversified' thanks to Labour and the Tories, the BNP team had a very good reception from local people, of which a large number were of Irish descent. Over 1000 local housing leaflets detailing the housing scams going on throughout the borough were handed out and brisk sales of Freedom and Identity magazine continued throughout the morning. Several passing cars stopped to buy copies of the newspaper while others beeped their horns to show support. Probably the most encouraging aspect of the activity was that 10 people signed up as new members. On the back of this success Barking and Dagenham British National Party will be holding regular papersales at other high profile locations across the borough each month.

SPENNYMOOR: Plans are laid for making an impact in May's local elections.

BNP now active in Tony Blair's constituency

THE message conveyed by Sedgefield and Wear Valley's Fund Holder Carl Whelpdale and Organiser Adam Walker, following their first meeting in Spennymoor on 3rd October was 'from small acorns mighty oaks will grow'. Local British National Party members and sympathisers met to discuss their views and ways forward in terms of promoting the Party in target wards in May. It was a constructive evening and a week later 1000 leaflets were distributed in Newton Aycliffe. This was just the start of what is planned to be a concentrated and sustained campaign aimed at making an impact at next year's local elections. As well as weekly leafletting and canvassing, a door-to-door round of Freedom will ensure that local people in Sedgefield and Wear Valley meet the real BNP which will help to dispel Labour's lies about the Party.

80 at East Birmingham meeting

THE first meeting of the reformed East Birmingham BNP took place on October 25th. Rob Purcell chaired the evening's proceedings and introduced himself to the 80-strong audience. Denis Adams, a British National Party member for many years, is the new organiser, and he spoke about the importance of attending local resident meetings to find out the issues that are important to local people and to give BNP officials and members a higher local profile. There then followed a variety of different speakers. Mike Bell called for activists to come forward and help with the big push for May's local elections. Tanya Whitehead announced the arrangements for the Christmas social and Richard Lumby talked about the importance of papersales. Jenny Noble, the Solihull organiser, updated those present on the plight of Kevin Hughes and asked everyone to remember Kevin when they were enjoying the Christmas festivities. The collection raised £220, which was boosted when a pensioner came forward and gave a £60 donation.

GEORGE JOHNSON: At the 1914-18 Cenotaph, Durham Road, Gateshead.

Sixty years on George answers his country's call once again

MORE than sixty years after he first answered his country's call in its hour of need, George Johnson is once again stepping forward to lend his support to those working to defend the freedom of the British people.

In May, after receiving a BNP local election leaflet, George Johnson came along to a BNP meeting in Gateshead where he met fellow ex-servicemen and a host of other people who, like him, are desperately worried about the direction our country is taking. "I was a bit apprehensive going to the meeting," George told Freedom.

"I didn't know what to expect, especially with all the nasty things said about the BNP in the local newspaper, but once I started talking to people, I found they had the same concerns as me and wanted to do something about it."

Back in 1943, George was also apprehensive when he gave up his butcher's job in Gateshead to join the Royal Navy and start his training at the naval base in Devonport.

On June 6, 1944, he was aboard a tank landing ship taking part in Operation Overlord which had the task of carrying D-Day soldiers to Juno Beach.

"Of course I was frightened. It was a really rough crossing and the soldiers we had on board were sick.

"We also took on wounded troops as we were equipped with operating theatres and everything else casualties might need. There were quite a few.

"That was my first trip at sea, and I remember watching the troops going out on to the beaches and feeling anxiety for them and what might be awaiting them."

George went on to serve with the Navy in the Mediterranean and the Pacific, witnessing the Japanese surrender in 1945.

OPERATION OVERLORD: George crewed an LST180 on D-Day. After the landings he was sent to the Pacific and was involved in the Battle at Okinawa.

He was welcomed to his first meeting by Tyneside BNP secretary Ken Booth, and the two quickly found some common ground.

"The Normandy Veterans have traced George's details and located the ship and landing craft that he was crewing. He was on the first wave at Juno Beach, which was the same beach my father landed on around the same time," Ken reported.

George, whose wife Jane died in 2001, said he was pleased he had finally made the move to join the British National Party.

"I have voted Labour for most of my life, but this lot today aren't really Labour. They're not interested in the well-being of working folk any more. The BNP is the only political party standing up for people like me and what is left of my generation."

Ken Booth hopes it is this message that will help the local media in the North East to want to look more closely at the BNP for themselves.

"At present the press just seems to print whatever our opponents say, without checking any facts or seeking to balance their reports. Hopefully in the run-up to May's election, with people like George joining our ranks, they will think twice before they publish attacks on the Party."

BNP battle to stop Gilwell Park mosque

TOP LEFT: Gilwell Park in Epping Forest has been known as the 'home of scouting' since 1919. Today it is a national scout activity centre, covering 110 acres, with a conference centre and facilities for climbing, go-karting, an aerial zip runway, shooting, archery, orienteering and camping.

BELOW: Epping BNP councillors Rodney Law and Terry Farr.

WHEN the Muslim Scout Fellowship applied to build a £250,000 mosque with a 35 foot minaret at Gilwell Park, residents were understandably concerned.

Over 100 turned up to a meeting at the scout centre called to, 'alleviate residents' fears which were based on misinformation and misunderstanding.' They were joined by BNP councillors Rodney Law and Terry Farr, on a guided tour of the site and Rodney took the precaution of recording what was said so he could refer back to it during the question and answer session that was due to follow.

But when everyone returned to the main hall, the chairman of the meeting from the Scout Association stunned the audience by calling for a vote to ban the two BNP councillors from the meeting. His motion was defeated almost unanimously, but then he refused to open the meeting if the BNP councillors were in the hall.

Not wishing to cause any further disruption and having already gained the support of all the local residents, Rodney and Terry left the meeting and made their way to the Town Hall to lodge an objection to the building of a mosque in Gilwell Park.
